

If You Think the Assault on American Workers Is a Thing of the Past, Think Again.

In 1935, President Roosevelt signed the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) to guarantee workers the basic rights to form unions and bargain collectively and established the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) to administer the law. Thanks to the NLRA, generations of working families have achieved the American Dream. But today, the Dream is at risk.

In a story that is all too familiar, George W. Bush has packed the NLRB with his corporate cronies — with tragic results. In September, the Bush Board rushed to pass several decisions that blatantly stack the deck against workers and in favor of corporations. They've made it nearly impossible for workers to exercise the rights guaranteed by the NLRA, while reversing decades of set labor laws and easing the way for companies to discriminate against and fire workers.

Instead of protecting workers, the Bush NLRB is allowing corporate abuse as bad as the club-wielding thugs of the past. The assault on worker rights is an assault on the American Dream.

Stop the Bush Assault on Workers' Rights.
Restore the American Dream.

Join us in condemning the Bush Labor Board. Demand that it protect workers' rights to organize and bargain collectively.

Learn more and sign the petition:
www.changetowin.org/nlrb

CHANGE to WIN